iCT Conference 2026

Industrial Computed Tomography

Industrial X-ray computed tomography (CT) is a method whose relevance has increased more and more because of its great advantages. CT is a non-destructive method for measuring components 3-dimensionally in order to find hidden features (e.g. shrink-holes, cracks, inclusions, pores, etc.) in the depth of the material and to determine physical variables like porosity and density.

CT allows the inspection and measurement of hidden and inaccessible specimen characteristics, which is not possible with other techniques. Due to the increasing dispersion of industrial CT, the method development and application areas are growing at a fast pace. Presentations of this conference will give insight into the newest developments as well as the established methods.

The conference will take place during four days. The first day (Tuesday) consists of the Industry day which is free of charge and for all people who are interested accessible. The sponsor exhibition starts on the first day and sponsors have the possibility to hold a speech of 08 - 10 min depending on the sponsor package for the conference audience and all others interested.

On the second day the conference is officially opened and only accessible to the people who registered for the iCT conference. The conference will last another 2 days.
